

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A method of dynamically setting pricing rates for an insurance product includes observing the demand behavior of customers and assigning the customer to a pricing tier based at least in part on the observed demand behavior of the customer as compared to historical demand behavior of customers in a same market segment. Empirical data or statistical data of customer demand behavior is analyzed to adjust pricing tiers and market segments.